Summary of Evaluation:
Teaching – Professor Peterson contributes to the teaching missions of both DAAS and History. He holds undergraduates to high standards for intensive reading and writing. His teaching and advising at the graduate level has been strong and student evaluations have been positive. He has served on many preliminary and dissertation committees, and supervised six doctoral students. In addition, he has led an initiative to recruit African students to pursue graduate degrees in history and to fund their work, as well as other African studies graduate projects, through the Rackham Graduate School.

Research – Professor Peterson is an interdisciplinary scholar, who works on the historiography of East Africa and African studies, more generally. His current book project, Ethnic Patriotism and the East African Revival, is forthcoming from Cambridge University Press. He has edited or co-edited three volumes of essays, is a member of several editorial boards, and in 2009 he founded the Cambridge Center of African Studies Series at the Ohio University Press. Digging down into the archives and historiographies of Uganda and Tanzania, he helps build and sustain the infrastructure crucial to historical knowledge through his retrieval, organization, and preservation of archival materials throughout the region.

Recent and Significant Publications:

Service – Professor Peterson has taken service roles in the African Studies Center (ASC), History, and DAAS. He will begin a term as director of the ASC in fall 2012. He has been actively involved in student recruitment, increasing the number of students in History’s graduate program.

External Reviews:
Reviewer (A)
“Creative Writing is a landmark book; there is nothing like it in East African colonial historiography. ... Peterson has looked at how Gikuyu people actually wrote, read, translated, interpreted and appropriated texts. ... His new book on the East African revival movement...widens the canvas to a whole region, and looks at case studies from ethnic-linguistic communities in Uganda, Kenya, Tanganyika and the central African borderlands.”

Reviewer (B)
“Derek has a gift for weaving quite complex theoretical issues... seamlessly into highly textured local level studies rich in ethnographic and historical documentation. ... Historians of Africa have tended to focus on particular ethnic groups, particular nations, or particular institutions. It took someone with the imagination and boldness of Derek to set aside those conventions and take up the study of an entire region, finding the interplay between ideas in one area and those across often arbitrary colonial borders.”

Reviewer (C)
“In addition to the monographs and articles, he has edited or co-edited several volumes of articles. Of the latter, at least two are major contributions to the field. ...in terms of productivity, visibility, and the respect his scholarship commands across three continents, Derek Peterson is a major figure in our field.”

Reviewer (D)
“...Peterson is without doubt one of the top African Historians [of his generation] in the world. He is certainly the leading historian of Kenya and Uganda... His linguistic ability...and his training...have made him a scholar who writes from a truly African perspective. This focus...was a central element of his first monograph but is even stronger in his more recent work... This work provides a particularly important corrective to those who see African ethnicities as the product of European intervention.”

Reviewer (E)
“The heart of Prof Peterson’s work is in East Africa but [he]...has also written convincingly on slavery, imperial history, religion in empire, and gender. His knowledge of the historiographies of west and southern Africa is substantial. This reach is matched by a methodological richness that characterizes all his work…”

Reviewer (F)
“…Peterson has emerged as one of the most significant living historians of East Africa and he is well on the way to becoming a respected and widely recognized authority on Africa tout court. …[he] shows every sign of sustaining a very aggressive and broadly conceived research program. …he clearly merits promotion to Full Professor on the basis of his work to this point.”

Reviewer (G)
“I enjoyed reading Dr Peterson’s forthcoming monograph The Pilgrims’ Politics. It is a tour de force and will be a very important book. He has written a regional history in a field still dominated by the bounded national history or the micro-history. Peterson has completed the Herculean feat of conducting in-depth research in three African countries, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda.”

Reviewer (H)
“Peterson is first-rate, a description I do not bestow on many people. His scholarship is original and pathbreaking…he is a diligent colleague and advocate of his own field. I fully expect him to advance to a position of intellectual and institutional centrality in the field of African studies.”

Summary of Recommendation:
Professor Peterson is an important figure in his research area. He is a serious and challenging teacher, and has a remarkable record of service. The Executive Committee of the College of Literature, Science, and the Arts and I recommend that Associate Professor Derek R. Peterson be promoted to the rank of professor of history, with tenure, and professor of Afroamerican and African studies, with tenure, in the College of Literature, Science, and the Arts.
