The regents met at 4:15 p.m. at the Little Bear East Arena, St. Ignace, and by livestream link on the university gateway. Participating were Regents Acker, Behm, Bernstein, Brown, Hubbard, Ilitch, Weiser and White. Also attending were Vice President Baird, Executive Vice President Chatas, Vice President Churchill, Provost McCauley, Vice President Cunningham, Chancellor Dutta, Chancellor Grasso, Vice President Harmon, Vice President Kolb, Vice President Lynch, Vice President Michels, Vice President Pendse, and Executive Vice President Runge.

Call to Order and President’s Opening Remarks

President Coleman called the meeting to order and welcomed everyone attending. She said, “I am so sorry not to be with you in person today. I have tested positive for COVID and am isolating at home, but I feel fine, for which I’m grateful. This has been a very personal reminder that despite having received vaccinations and boosters, COVID is still with us. I want to encourage everyone to please be up to date with your vaccinations.

“The University has had a governing board since its inception in 1817, made up of men and women from around the state committed to governing a public university. Our regents have represented places as diverse as Detroit and Cassopolis. They have come from communities like Niles, Grand Rapids and Romeo. Several regents have hailed from towns in the Upper Peninsula (UP), including Ironwood, Houghton and Sault Sainte Marie. But the board has never held a formal meeting in the UP until today. Ann Arbor and southeastern Michigan have amazing attractions, but nothing compares with the majesty of the Mackinac Bridge. Regent Brown, I know your grandfather, Senator Prentiss Brown, chaired the Mackinac Bridge Authority that led to the construction of the bridge. That is a remarkable legacy and one that benefits the entire state.

“It’s a very exciting time for the University of Michigan. As many of you know, our Chair, Paul Brown, and his board colleagues last week appointed Dr. Santa Ono to be the university’s 15th president. Dr. Ono comes to Michigan from the University of British Columbia, an excellent public research university. As a leader, he is deeply committed to carbon neutrality and sustainability, to student mental health, and to equity and inclusion in higher education. And he has a strong appreciation for intercollegiate athletics.

“Dr. Ono is joining a campus that is more vibrant and more engaged than ever, and he will add to the energy that I feel every day at Michigan. Our enrollment now exceeds 50,000, with students from all 83 counties in Michigan. Some 800 students from northern Michigan attend UM, including more than 200 students from the UP. And in a few weeks, we will welcome our third cohort of UP Scholars. When they graduate, they will join some 12,000 alumni who call this region home.

“We are proud of the university’s deep connections throughout northern Michigan. For more than a century, faculty and students have carried out important environmental research at our Biological Station at Douglas Lake. A number of people at today’s meeting visited the BioStation earlier today to meet the students and learn about the fieldwork.

“We have such unique natural resources in Michigan, and our faculty are committed to protecting them for future generations. This includes tracking dangerous algae blooms and the damage of quagga and zebra mussels in the Great Lakes. This is critical work with real-life environmental and economic implications for our state and region.

“We can’t talk about Michigan’s impact and not include athletics, because our student-athletes are tremendous university ambassadors. Next week – in anticipation of the fall season – the Michigan football team will be experiencing our state as part of their Pure Michigan tour. You’ll find the players and Coach Jim Harbaugh in Charlevoix, on Mackinac and Drummond islands, at the Soo and along Lake Superior.

“All of this activity – from Ann Arbor to Lake Superior – is why we exist: to serve the people and communities of our state and beyond. We do so by treating and healing, by working with local leaders, by studying our lakes and forests, and by educating young people who want to improve the world around them. We are the leading public research university in the country, and it has a direct impact on our local communities. In the past five years alone, northern Michigan companies have received more than $9.4 million to supply goods and services for UM research projects. That helps to support employment across large and small businesses in the region. We are proud of that impact. I know that Regent Brown has more to say about our visit.

Regent Brown said, “I would like to thank everyone for coming here today. Especially congressman Bart Stupac and the members of the band, our nurses who traveled here from Ann Arbor and most importantly, my father, Regent Emeritus Paul Brown. We're here today because all of the Regents are acutely aware of the debt that the university owes all of the citizens of Michigan. During our 200-year history, we've been supported by the taxpayers, and because of that obligation, we’re here to present to you some of the value that we create for your tax dollars. We are also here to listen to each of you tell us about what we can do to serve you better. The Michigan Constitution, which creates and dictates our university only gives us one charge, which is to serve the public good.

“We cannot talk about the university’s rich history without discussing our relationship with the native people of this territory and state. Today’s Ann Arbor campus sits on land ceded through the Treaty of Detroit in 1807. Ten years later, in the first month of the university’s existence, the Ojibwe, Odawa, and Bodewadami Nations ceded land to what was called “the college at Detroit,” which is where UM began. The tribes did this with the hope that their children could be educated at this new Institution. The university eventually sold the land and the proceeds were used to establish the Ann Arbor campus.

“For this awarding of land, we owe a profound debt to the native tribes of Michigan. We also owe our community a deeper understanding of the complex connections between the university, Native Americans, and federal treaties like the one that led to land being used to house and fund our institution.

“This is why I am pleased the university has launched the Inclusive History Project to build a more accurate narrative of our past. It’s critical for the university to also hold up a mirror to itself. Our 200 years of history are remarkable yet also flawed. With the Inclusive History Project, we pledge to develop a more truthful and inclusive narrative about our university’s past. Only then can we move forward as a genuinely equitable community that acknowledges and celebrates all its members.

Presentations:

President Coleman introduced the following individuals who gave presentations on the topics listed: Adele Brumfield, vice provost for enrollment management, gave a presentation on admissions and financial aid; Vice President Cunningham shared a presentation on the economic impact of UM in the Upper Peninsula and northern Michigan; Alumni Brad King, CEO of Orbion, gave a presentation on his engineering company in the Upper Peninsula; Amiee Clawson, director of the Biological Station, gave a presentation on the Biostation, and introduced her colleagues Andre Green, who presented on butterfly research, and Karen Olofs, who spoke of fisheries research; Executive Vice President Runge provided information about the impact of the UM Health System, and introduced Anders McCarthy, who spoke of his experience with the UM Health System.

Regent Hubbard said, “I wanted to thank you for inviting us to the Biological Station. I found the visit educational and inspirational, and the work that you are doing is amazing and I'm glad that the Board of Regents got a chance to see it. And thank you to the Alumni Association for inviting us to Camp Michigania. I appreciate the support and hospitality we have received in northern Michigan.
